Health and Wellness Tip for April

Now that we know what stress is and how it can impact our physical and emotional health, the next step is developing ways to combat it. Although stress is a part of daily life, it can be managed to avoid negative consequences. Below are some strategies for combatting stress.

- Talk to friends or family when you are feeling stressed out. Taking the time to vent and express your feelings can help provide support, clarity on the situation and offer advice
- Exercise to produce endorphins, which aid in lowering stress levels and improving sleep. Try to incorporate a walk, bike ride, visit to the gym, or any other form of exercise into your daily life
- Meditate to calm your mind and body.
- Keep a journal to assist you in better understanding your range of emotions. Research has shown that simply jotting down how you feel can help to lower stress and relieve anxiety
